

10th ACM International Conference on Distributed and Event-based Systems

Irvine, CA
June 20-24, 2016

About DEBS 2016

The ACM International Conference on Distributed and Event-based Systems (DEBS) provides the most prestigious forum for researchers and practitioners in the fields of distributed and event-based computing. The conference addresses all aspects of such systems ranging from those discussed in related disciplines (e.g., software systems, distributed systems, distributed data processing, data management, dependability, knowledge management, networking, programming languages, security and software engineering), to domain-specific topics of event-based computing (e.g., real-time analytics, mobile computing, social networking, pervasive, green computing and ubiquitous computing, sensors networks, user interfaces, big data processing, spatio-temporal processing, cloud computing, the Internet of Things, peer-to-peer computing, embedded systems and stream processing), to enterprise-related topics (e.g., complex event detection, enterprise application integration, real-time enterprises and web services).

Over the past decade, the conference has built its reputation by showcasing leading-edge research of the highest quality together with talks, tutorials and discussions by the most renowned leaders and innovators in the field. In addition to a research track, DEBS also features an industry track, in which practitioners present experience and application papers reporting on innovative industrial implementations and applications of distributed and event-based computing, with a particular focus on their impact on business practice.

DEBS 2016 will take place in June 2016 in Irvine, CA, USA. The conference will be hosted in the Beckman Center. It will be organized by ACM and researchers from UC Irvine, the Technion, Humboldt-University of Berlin and in cooperation with research and industry leaders from major universities and companies worldwide. Based on past conferences, we expect more than 100 experts attending the conference from all over the world.
